

Toy Vacuum- Dyson Ball Vacuum

With Real Suction and Sounds

We looked forward to giving this toy to our son for Christmas. Kids ages 2-3 love to push toys and control them: lawnmowers, vacuums - these toys are perfect for the age group and interest. Our son was so excited. However, when we opened it up, he was immediately frustrated. It doesn't stand up. As you use it, the back wheels constantly get stuck and the vacuum cannot click and stay in place. So, when you want it to stand up or lean, it cannot stay up and when you want to push it, it tends to momentarily lock upright. We know how to get it back to the right place, but kids of this age group need to experience independence in play and it makes our son so frustrated to not be able to stand it up or play with it by himself. The dispenser to collect dust is difficult even for us to remove. The vacuum is also very small, even for our averaged-sized 2.5 year old son. We also recognize that the vacuum does not have suction as advertised (not a huge problem for a kids' toy but it should not be advertised this way) although overall, we agree that the toy sucks.

I was hoping for something that would actually suction up small pieces of paper or crumbs. The hole on the bottom is only 1x1 so there isn't any power. Also the removable tray is so tiny and hard to remove i can barely do it myself...let alone my 3 year old. He loves the toy though. With such mixed reviews i was hesitant to buy. I decided to check it out in person and decide, i would not have paid more than the $29.99 it is currently priced at, previously i saw it at $43.00 it is not worth that much. I would say a $24.99 is a fair price for this product, it is semi-durable and fun to play with. it comes boxed in 1 complete piece except for the handle, which snaps on.

I bought this toy for my son with autism who is obsessed with my real Dyson vacuum that this one is modeled after. He was very excited when he saw the box because he knew it was for him but a bit perplexed at the size. If you have the real life one, I'd gather it's about a fifth it's size. The handle does not retract (which was the first thing he tried to do to see if it would reach up higher :Also the canister does not come off and there is no step button to lay it down in the rolling position. It also very easily pops back into the upright position during use. This was somewhat frustrating for him as he was trying to use it like the real vacuum by stepping on the back to get it to lay down. So, if you have children like my son who may have issues with change, just be forewarned that it only looks identical so those will be the changes. It's extremely small, so the ages 3-8 is not accurate as he is only five and is perhaps no taller than the average 6 or 7 year old at most. So, he has to stoop down pretty low to use it. He loves it still as of today, but I am sure he will tire of it and want the regular sized one soon, so my plan to keep my other one in tact, may not work :). It's made of plastic, my son is pretty destructive however, so I can't attest to the durability of it as he is not the average toy user and tends to break a lot of items Considering this cost as much as a real vacuum of a cheaper company I am a bit disappointed since I only bought it because it looks like the one we have in our home. So, it's a cute little toy, but not so much for a taller child or a child who is easily frustrated like my son with autism. See all 786 customer reviews...
